Duration Of Disability Under New State Insurance Less Than Estimated

Duration of illnesses and injuries for which state disability insurance benefits are being paid is proving to be less than estimated by the California Department of Employment. Dr. Bert S. Thomas, medical director of the Department of Employment, today reported that a study made of several hundred cases, chosen at random, revealed an average duration of disability of 3.3 weeks. The Department had estimated the average duration of the cases at 4.6 weeks, while the prognosis of the doctors who certified the disabilities averaged 6.9 weeks.

Dr. Thomas pointed out that the disability compensation phase of the Unemployment Insurance Act requires a claimant who is unable to work because of a physical or mental illness or injury to obtain a physician's certificate to attest to the disability. Included in the certificate is the doctor's estimate of the length of time he believes it will take for the disability to end.

"Apparently through modesty, doctors are estimating that it will take them twice as long to cure their patients as is proving to be the case from factual findings," the medical director said. "The facts reveal that although many doctors have put themselves on record to the contrary, they are proving themselves to be as good as the average doctor in restoring their patients' health."

The tendency to overestimate the duration in the doctors' prognoses as compared with the Department's forecasts is revealed in some examples cited by the department. The state agency estimated that flu cases would return to work in one or two weeks, rather than in two or four; that those who had hernial repairs could reasonably

Vets Asked To Take Advantage Of Preference

Veterans frequently are reducing their own chances of appointment to state civil service jobs by not taking full advantage of the veterans' preference granted on such examinations, J. G. Caldwell, of the Veterans Service Center, declared today.

In order to receive the extra points granted on examinations, the veteran must file for veterans' preference prior to each examination, Caldwell emphasized. All veterans are eligible for 10 points preference, and disabled veterans receive 15 points. Widows of veterans are also granted 10 points.

Although applications for civil service examinations are filed with the State Personnel Board, veterans' preference applications must be filed with the State Department of Veterans Affairs.

The first time a veteran files application for preference in civil service examinations, he must submit proof of his veteran status. However, it is not necessary to resubmit military
